

When Good Intentions Backfire: Navigating Ethics and Professional Risks of Counselor Advocacy

Dr. Marisa L. White

Session Overview:

This session explores real-world examples where counselor advocacy led to unintended consequences. It also equips professionals with tools to advocate effectively and ethically. Through interactive dialogue, we address systemic resistance and how to cultivate sustainable advocacy practices.

Learning Objectives:

By the end of this session, participants will be able to:

1. Identify professional and personal risks associated with counselor advocacy.
2. Develop strategies for ethical, effective advocacy within professional boundaries.
3. Create a framework for sustainable advocacy that protects clients and counselors.

Quick Poll

Have you ever hesitated to advocate due to fear of professional consequences?

Defining Counselor Advocacy

Definition: promotion of the well-being of individuals, groups, and the counseling profession within systems and organizations.
Advocacy Levels: Individual | Community | Institutional | Public Policy

Why Advocacy Matters

- | | |
|---|--|
| <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Promote social justice• Address systemic barriers• Uphold professional ethics | <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Empower clients• Influence policy• Prevent burnout |
|---|--|

 Roles of an Advocate: Educator, ally, policy influencer, community organizer, system navigator

Consequences of Advocacy

Positive:

- ✓ Ethical practice
- ✓ Client empowerment
- ✓ Systemic change
- ✓ Social awareness

Negative:

- ✗ Professional pushback
- ✗ Burnout
- ✗ Role confusion
- ✗ Personal risk

Risks of Advocacy

Professional Risks:

Job loss or demotion
Damaged reputation
Conflicts with institutions

Personal Risks:

Burnout
Threats to safety
Legal and financial stress

When Good Intentions Backfire

Overstepping Boundaries: Disempowering clients

Cultural Missteps: Misaligned values, disrespect

Role Conflicts: Policy violations, mixed responsibilities

Alienation: Poor communication or controversial alignment

Unintended Harm: Ripple effects for which one does not account

Strategies for Ethical & Effective Advocacy

Know your role and boundaries
Consult codes of ethics (ACA, ASCA)
Document actions

Seek supervision/consultation
Collaborate (don't confront)

Sustainable Advocacy Framework

Key Elements:

- ✓ Strategic plan: Clear goals
- ✓ Self-care and resilience
- ✓ Allyship

Framework Template

- ✓ Identify advocacy goals
- ✓ Assess risks and benefits
- ✓ Develop contingency plans
- ✓ Self-care

For New Counselors:

- ✓ Set realistic expectations
 - ✓ Build support networks
 - ✓ Seek mentorship
 - ✓ self-care and resilience
-

Case Scenarios & Reflective Questions

Mental Health Counseling Scenario: Ms. Green, a mental health counselor in a community clinic, becomes frustrated by the lack of transportation services for her low-income clients. She writes an op-ed criticizing the local transit authority and names specific politicians. While well-intentioned, her public critique violates agency policy, and she is placed on administrative leave. Her clients, many of whom are from marginalized backgrounds, experience service disruptions.

- How could she have protected her role while advocating?
 - What ethical dilemmas arise in public advocacy?
 - How can counselors respect political/cultural contexts?
-

Supervision Scenario: Mr. Chen, a clinical supervisor, notices that his supervisee, Maria, who is Latina, is being assigned more clients with high-risk needs than her white peers. Without discussing his concerns with Maria first, Mr. Chen emails agency leadership accusing them of discrimination. Maria, who had a good relationship with leadership and preferred to handle the situation herself, feels disempowered and embarrassed, damaging her rapport with both her supervisor and the agency.

- How can supervisors support without disempowering?
 - What is the role of consent in supervision?
 - How do cultural values shape advocacy needs?
-

School Counseling Scenario: Ms. Patel, a high school counselor, advocates for a gender-neutral bathroom for LGBTQ+ students. Without informing parents or the school board, she initiates a student-led petition and posts supportive signs around the school. While many students are grateful, the action triggers a backlash from parents and administrators, resulting in a temporary suspension and an investigation.

- How could advocacy be handled more collaboratively?
 - What are the ethical implications?
 - How does community diversity impact advocacy?
-

Counselor Education

Scenario: Dr. Lopez, a counselor educator, notices that her graduate counseling students of color are not receiving the same internship opportunities as their peers. Wanting to support them, she speaks out publicly at a university meeting, naming specific site supervisors and accusing them of implicit racism. This creates tension between the university and the community partners, resulting in fewer available internship sites for all students.

- What alternatives could preserve relationships?
 - What ethical concerns are raised?
 - How can student voices be elevated respectfully?
-

Interactive Exercise: Think-Pair-Share

"What advocacy risks have you experienced or witnessed?"

Final Tips

Know when to push vs. when to pause
Sustainable change requires strategy, not sacrifice

Prioritize self-preservation alongside advocacy
Build alliances, not enemies